1 Hypotheses

We seek to prove that some parts of this data, and some pairs, have association. By performing this test, we attempt to find associations between abstract data values and tests.

H_0 = There is no association within the data.

H_a = There is an association, or multiple, within the data.

To reject the null hypothesis, we must prove that the alternative hypothesis is correct. In order to do so, we must use the χ^2 values and their associated p -values, as well as graphs and charts depicting these data, to independently analyze them if the χ^2 tests do not provide enough information to support the alternative hypothesis.

1.1 Specific general hypotheses

Some general hypotheses we have about this data are:

- There are associations between philosophical outlook and school.
- There are associations between randomness and age due to maturity.
- MIC will have more STEM-oriented hobbies due to its emphasis on STEM and its attractiveness to STEM enthusiasts.
- SWHS will play more sports on average due to dedicated programs.
- MIC will have a significantly higher proportion of students eating school lunch due to a higher quality of school lunch served.
- There will be a significant difference in weighted GPA between the two schools.
- MIC will have a higher rate of college attendance.
- There will be a significant difference in variability between the two academic environments.

To test these hypotheses, we must perform tests in order to determine their significance, such as two-sample significance tests for means, χ^2 significance tests, and we will analyze the p -values at $\alpha = 0.05$ to determine significance.

2 Survey contents

The survey is split into two sections: basic information, and hypotheticals. The first section collects basic data about the user, such as their favorite food. The second section asks the user hypothetical dilemmas in order to gauge their philosophical or ethical outlooks.

- Tell the truth
- Lie
- Falsely accuse your friend of something worse

19. Everyone in the world has to take a private vote by pressing a red or blue button. If more than 50 percent of people press the blue button, everyone survives. If less than 50 percent of people press the blue button, only people who pressed the red button survive. Either way, pressing the red button guarantees your own survival. What do you press?
- Red
 - Blue
20. When does a ring become a tube?

- Unleash fury on the printer
 - Go to a copy shop
 - Ask a friend (in this hypothetical, you have some)
 - Ask the teacher for an extension on the project
22. On a table, there is a live beetle, a live lizard, a live goldfish, a live rodent, and a live earwig. A strange man is forcing you to stuff one in your pocket in the morning and return the creature alive to him by the end of the day. Your pocket has a zipper, and it can hold oxygenated water without leaking. Which one do you pick?
- Beetle
 - Lizard
 - Goldfish
 - Rodent
 - Earwig
 - All of them, in separate pockets, at the same time for a greater reward
 - Embrace uncertainty and flee

3 Methodology

To collect our data, we will use surveys among the student bodies of SWHS and MIC. To achieve this, we will distribute QR codes leading to the survey among the campus; of those, we have around 220.

We then contact teachers and administrators in order to further spread our survey among the student population of both SWHS and MIC. To avoid confounding, we will restrict the population to those within the WALTON_CSD group.

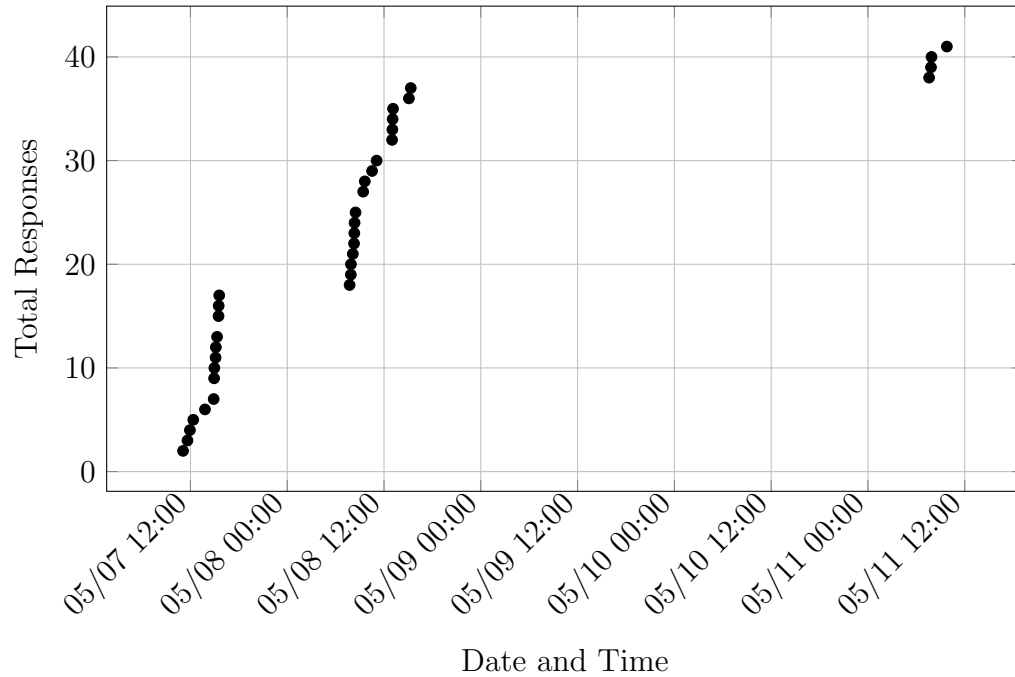

4 Collection statistics

In total, the survey obtained X responses out of the possible 1127 students in the population of SWHS and X responses out of the possible 117 students in the population of MIC. This is a proportion of $\hat{p} = 0.X$ for SWHS and $\hat{p} = 0.X$ for MIC.

I recruited people to hand out QR codes at MIC, and put my complete confidence in them. The school was in its' busy season, so many didn't respond or were too busy to respond.

One small quirk about Microsoft Forms is that we get to know when the responses are submitted. This gives us an extra data point as well as enabling us to make graphs such as these:

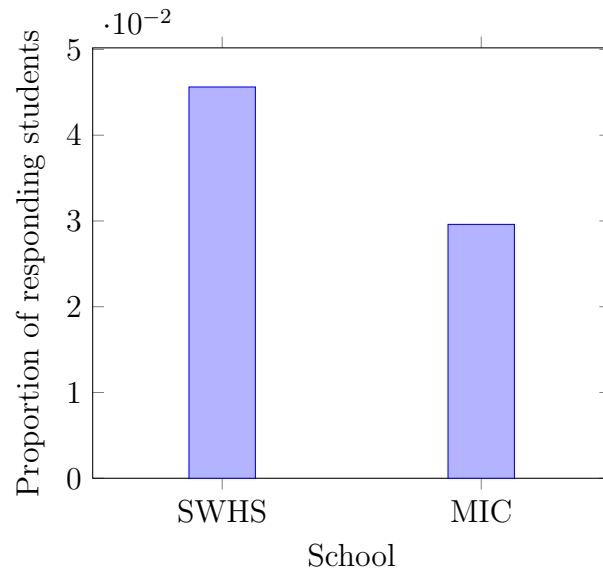

This graph represents the the total responses in relation to time. The x -axis represents time, and the points are plotted based on the submission time rather than the start time (to maintain the function-like characteristics of the plot) while the y -axis is the total responses of the survey. Here you will see distinct clusters of responses, noticing that most responses take place within school hours; exactly when the surveys are distributed.

4.1 Response rates

This graph represents the total responses attributed to each school in our study. SWHS had a much higher total of responses due to its ease of access and heavy student population. However:

This graph represents the proportion of students in each school who responded to the survey. Therefore, SWHS had a higher response volume, while MIC had a higher response rate.

5 Data analysis

We have large amounts of quantitative and qualitative data, as seen in the appendix. To analyze this large amount, we will use pie charts, bar charts, scatter plots, heatmaps, box-and-whisker plots, and general interesting statistics in order to present our data in a human-readable format. We will use χ^2 tests for associations, as well as t -tests for significance. We will make confidence intervals and determine significance based on those intervals. We will also present this data in a clean, aesthetically pleasing, human-readable format. To start:
